The Markt, the "nerve center" of Bruges. And you can see why: Shadowed by medieval buildings, the area is peppered with cafés that spill out into the streets.

Horse-drawn carriages also clip-clop through the city square. You'll find it right in the heart of Bruges, within a five or six-minute walk from the Church of Our Lady and the Groeninge Museum.

Brugse Vrije: This building was once the administrative centre of Bruges when it was in its Liberty of Bruges phase in the 12th Century and is still used as offices to this day.

The building itself is stunning to look upon and the carved chimney, from the 15th Century, is arguably its most beautiful asset.

Also worth seeing is the mantelpiece ornament, made from oak, depicting Charles V and his two grandfathers.

Church of Our Lady: Completed in the 15th century, the construction of this church took two centuries to construct, and the result is a soaring 381-foot brick spire (the largest in the world) that can be seen for miles.

And there's another artistic treasure inside: Michelangelo's "Madonna and Child" sculpture.

Celebration · ESCAPES ·

— TRANSFORMING DREAMS INTO MEMORIES —

There are also tombs and a couple of mausoleums that are worth seeing. And just to clear any confusion, the church's name -- Onze-Lieve-Vrouwekerk -- translates into Church of Our Lady.

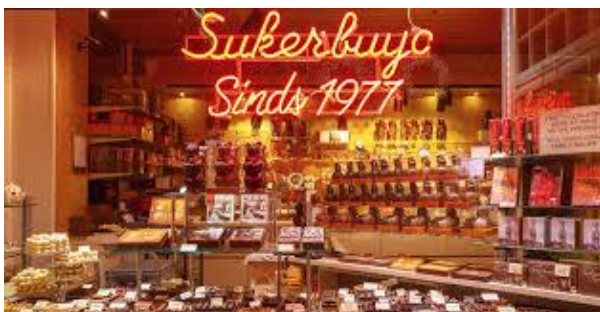

For its size Bruges contains an inordinate amount of art galleries and museums, from local art to collections dedicated to the likes Of Salvador Dali and Picasso.

The Groeninge Museum, Bruges's museum of fine arts, hosts a number of works by the famous 15th-century Flemish painters Jan van Eyck and Hans Memling. But that's not all: Works from the Flemish Primitives, as well as from the Modernists, also adorn the walls. Of special note is Hieronymus Bosch's "The Last Judgment" and Jan van Eyck's "Madonna with Canon van der Paele."

Although this point can be applied to anywhere in Belgium, Bruges is a really a showcase city for two of Belgium's main treats, beer and chocolate.

Sukerbuyc is a family run chocolatier and cafe which is a great spot to taste some of the best chocolate in the city/country/world. Order yourself a hot drink and you can expect it to come with some of the divine chocolate made at the cafe.

Bruges once contained dozens of breweries, but now De Halve Maan is the last one standing.

In medieval times, the Belfry and Market Halls (translated from Belfort en Hallen) was a bustling marketplace presided over by a soaring gothic bell tower. Today, the echoing chimes of the carillon bells can still be heard throughout Bruges. And you can also climb the tower's 366 steps for a sweeping view of Bruges.

The Frietmuseum claims to be the world's first and only museum dedicated to Belgian potato fries (frites).

On the first floor, you can learn about Belgium's history with this beloved snack; on the ground floor, the museum traces the potato's roots from Peru; and in the basement you can sample some tasty potato fries.

The Romanesque-style Basilica of the Holy Blood curiously has an ornate Gothic upper level. But most visitors flock to this chapel to look at a small vial of blood, which is said to have belonged to none-other than Jesus Christ. Every year on Ascension Day (in May or June), the bishop of Bruges accompanies the holy relic through the city streets in the Procession of the Holy Blood.

Choco-Story: This museum is all about chocolate: its history, its recipes and more. In fact, Choco-Story's mission statement is: "To make known the story of the transformation of cocoa into chocolate and to promote the health and quality aspects of Belgian chocolate."

A very agreeable half an hour should be spent travelling the cities arteries where secret gardens, picturesque bridges and crumbly old houses look even more beautiful when viewed from the water. Relax in the Beguinage: This is a little haven of tranquility where swans gather on the banks of the canal and people relax in the pretty restaurants and bars that line the perimeter.

The Beguinage became popular in Flemish kingdom of the 14th century and were semi-monastic dwellings for women, where the way of life was similar to that of a convent, but the women never took oaths.

This isn't your ordinary hospital, the Museum St Janshospital is a restored 12th century hospital, complete with timber roof beams and art masterpieces dating back to the 15th Century.

The turrets and slitted windows on the buildings facade ooze Gothic beauty.

There are also a number of statues of former counts and countesses of Flanders.

The Burg square, right next to the better known but arguably less impressive Markt square, is worth a visit during your time in the city. The palace in the square was the seat of the Count of Flanders for many years.

The square was also the site of a magnificent cathedral but this was torn down in the 18th Century.

The Burg is probably the best place in Bruges for lovers of architecture as the collection of buildings dotted around this square are all beautiful in their own way.

It was built by the Adornes family in the 15th Century and was based upon the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem.

The altarpiece of the church is covered in skulls and there is also an effigy of Jesus Christ's corpse and a tomb containing only the heart of Anselm Adornes which was supposedly bought all the way back from Scotland following Adornes murder. It is safe to say that this church is one of the more macabre in the city of Bruges.

Kasteel Van Loppem or, in English, Castle Loppem is a good opportunity to explore the area just outside of Bruges. The building, which is just on the outskirts of the city, is more of a mansion than a castle.

It was built in the 19th Century and was home of the Belgian King for a short period of time after the end of the First World War.

During this time it was also a command center for Belgium's army. The park surrounding the castle are wonderful and home to a maze and ponds.
